A Beginners Guide to Teenage Wicca

Teenage is a time of rebellious thoughts and hurtful words. In many families, children are trying desperately to break out of their shells and to go out into the fascinating world that opens up before them. Unfortunately, it is often the parents who are not ready to let their offspring fly off into a new world.

We need to take some hints by watching the animal world and how they encourage their young to move away from them. Mother birds are known to slowly nudge or even push away the baby birds from the safe nest in which it has lived all its life. Birds and animals are really "free" to live as they choose.

As teenagers open up their minds, many of them are exposed to conflicting attitudes and opinions. If they side with any one other than their parents in these matters, the parents feel that they have done a terrible job raising their children. Since most of us reading this have been teens at one time, we need to also be aware that each of us has a brain for a reason.

Children who are interested in witchcraft may need to be aware of the advantages and disadvantages of getting serious about Witchcraft.

Witchcraft is the most natural way of living. In harmony with nature, we respect and preserve the traditional ways of life including our wonder at the Universe, reverence for the natural elements such as plants, trees and animals and also a deep respect for all things that "seem" different.

The word "seem" is emphasized only to prove that we are not really different from each other.

As we learn more about spirituality, one thought will come to the forefront; that we are all one and the same. Differences are merely decorations that dissolve in the presence love and compassion.

For those interested in Wicca or the witchcraft way of life, here are some hints:

Do not join Wicca or talk about witchcraft because you believe it is cool or different or even shocking to some people. Witchcraft is a beautiful way of living and a legally accepted world religion.

Many of the things you hear about this religion or its practice many not be true. So go online, get some books by serious Wicca practitioners and learn all about this beautiful lifestyle.

If you are a teen and you know that your parents are against anything other than the religion that they practice now, be patient.

Try to learn about Wicca and learn meditation techniques to sharpen your mind while you wait to be 18 or 21 so that you can join it as a legal member.

While you are waiting to become a practicing witch, make sure you practice patience, compassion, empathy and understanding everyday.

Remember, as witches, we believe that whatever we do unto others returns to us three-fold. This means that we have to learn to deal with frustrations without resorting to angry confrontations, name calling or negative outbursts. Also, do learn to control your temper, to be patient with others and to learn about what it means to be a good witch.

A good witch never puts down anyone who defames our religion. We don't have to defend our beliefs to anyone. If anyone insults us or even attacks us, we need to find peaceful ways to end the violence.

We don't have to wear a lapel pin with the words "witch" on it. Witchcraft is not about identity or fitting in. It is about the strength of our mind and the best way to live our life. It is "nobody's business" but ours.

Be aware that that you are living a life of highest potential. Mankind has had many teachers who came before us and who have shown us the way. However, we come into this world with abundant wisdom and we do not have to impress anyone but ourselves.

Above all, our goal should be to help others rather than to help ourselves.
