Three things you should know about black magic

Magic has been around since human beings appeared on Earth. No one can claim to have discovered it because it is something that each of us use at times without even being aware of it. When we think of vengeful thoughts and about hurting someone, we are pushing our intentions to work. If we love someone dearly and pray for them to heal from an illness, well, that is magick too. That is all there is to it.

Magick does not have a color. On the other hand, when we work on magick, all colors have special significance. Remember that white contains ALL colors of the spectrum. Certainly white is not the opposite of black. The colors Black and white are neither good nor bad.

However, the term "black magic" was applied by the medieval Christian Church which typically and ignorantly also associated "black" with "bad". Remember, they also called Alchemists (scientists) evil and black as well and did not mind killing innocent people for whatever reason.

These days, black magick is considered to be anything that hurts another human being, animal or thing. If we destroy the environment, it can be considered black magic. In that case, all people who destroy rain forests in order to raise cattle or build condominiums can be considered practitioners of black magic. All business people who make money by taking advantage of others are working black magic too.

So how do each of us decide whether we are working in black magic or not? It's not that easy. There are three ways you can look at any action to determine if this will hurt another.

1. Reason

First determine the reason for the action. If you are angry with someone and would like to take revenge, the source is hatred. This is pure and simple black magic. However, if you are in love with someone who is already being courted by another and you try to take this person back by making your opponent look weak, are you working black magic? Of course you are. Although your intention is to love someone or get the attention of someone, you are hurting another person. Yes, this may seem trivial to some people, but remember that each of our actions do return similar results. Pay with hate and you get back hatred. Hurt another and you get hurt. That is the law of the Universe.

2. Price

What exactly do you do to get what you want? Are you willing to steal, maim or kill someone to get your desires? Of course, everyone knows that this type of behavior will bring only one result - sorrow. How about the situation where your mother is sick and you make chicken soup for her? Do you see that your desire (source) to help your mother resulted in the death of the chicken, an innocent creature which, by the way, has a similar goal as us to live out its life in peace? It is very difficult to decide if our actions hurt others, right? It's very true indeed. If we treat all animate and inanimate things on Earth as equal to us humans, it is easy to wonder if our actions are benevolent or malevolent to the other co-habitants on Earth.

When the Earth was young and humans appeared on isolated parts of the planet, we didn't have countries, governments or businesses. Now, it is a race to make the most money anyone can in a lifetime. We cannot take all this money with us when we die. Why then do we destroy the environment and join the rat race in order to have more things than our neighbors?

3. Result

To decide if we are indeed dabbling in black magic, just look at the effect of our actions. When an oil rig bursts and the Ocean is filled with muck, thousands of animals are killed needlessly. When the oil company decides to put an offshore rig, whom do they ask permission from? Not the animals that share the Ocean or the fishermen whose lives depend on it. They are in such a hurry that they forget who gets hurt when things go well as well as when things don't go so well. What can we do to the animals and humans who are affected by manmade disasters? Who takes the blame? How can we nullify the effects of such tragedies?

Black magick did not originate in Africa as some ignorant folks think. It is everywhere, in the hearts of all humans who hoard food, money and land. Black magick is the reason why we have atom bombs, wars, religious fanaticism and dictators. It is the cause of people dying in some countries due to lack of food while in other countries they throw out so much food everyday that there are not enough landfills to take all our waste products!

As you can see, it is up to each of us to think through all of our decisions and make sure that we don't hurt another animals, human or thing, today, tomorrow and in the future.
